

Concerns in Urban Local Governments

What is the issue?

\n\n

\n

- It is quarter century since the creation of municipalities under 74th Constitutional Amendment Act.

\n

- It is imperative at this juncture to assess the progress of municipal governance in India.

\n

\n\n

What are the concerns?

\n\n

\n

- Limitations - States have fallen short of implementing the provisions of the 74th Amendment.

\n

- There are concerns in underlying constitutional design of urban local governments (ULGs).

\n

- Local governments are financially constrained.

\n

- They do not have the administrative capacity to carry out its functions.

\n

- ULGs are increasingly disempowered and depoliticised as an institution.

\n

\n\n

\n

- Power - The elected representatives at the city-level are rendered powerless.

\n

- In most municipal corporations, the mayor is largely the ceremonial head.

\n

- The executive powers are vested with the State government-appointed commissioner.

\n

- This disjuncture in municipal governance has been exploited by State governments.
\n
- Parastatal agencies - Various parastatal agencies are created by the State government.
\n
- These further deny municipal corporations their political role.
\n
- E.g. urban development authorities (building infrastructure), public corporations (water, electricity, transportation services, etc)
\n
- Even urban planning and land-use regulation is with State government-controlled development authorities.
\n
- These agencies function with certain autonomy.
\n
- Moreover they are accountable only to the State government, and not the local government.
\n
- Parastatal agencies and unelected commissioners are pre-74th Amendment legacies that have not been undone.
\n
- Depoliticisation - There is increasing depoliticisation of local government in recent years.
\n
- These seek to ring fence projects from local government.
\n
- E.g. Central government programmes such as the Smart Cities Mission.
\n
- This programme mandates the creation of special purpose vehicles (SPVs) for Smart Cities.
\n
- SPVs will have operational independence.
\n
- They will have autonomy in decision making and implementation.
\n
- State government can further delegate the decision-making powers available to the ULBs to the Chief Executive Officer of the SPV.
\n
- Disempowerment - Even for performing functions that are within its purview, local government requires State government permissions.
\n
- These include functions like levying local taxes or undertaking civic projects above a certain budget.
\n

- Municipalities are not yet autonomous units to be truly called as the “third tier” of government in India’s federal system.
\n
- The creation of parallel institutions further disempowers the elected local government.
\n
- It shows how higher levels of government distrust local politics.
\n
- Functions - Functions in 12th Schedule which a State government is expected to devolve to the local government should be relooked.
\n
- It does not include essential civic issues such as urban transportation, housing or urban commons.
\n
- Civic activism - This has often been focussed on the creation of two bodies mandated by the 74th Amendment.
\n
- They are the ward committees and metropolitan planning committees.
\n
- However, there is an over-reliance on such semi-representative bodies.
\n
- This does not augur well for creating a genuinely democratic city government.
\n
- Civil society’s emphasis on nominating its members into ward committees can further depoliticise local governments.
\n
- It could make them captive to the interests of certain elite resident welfare associations.
\n
- Exceptions - The 74th Amendment contains an industrial township exception.
\n
- A municipality need not be constituted in areas which are declared as industrial townships.
\n
- These provisions have been employed by State governments to keep local governments weak.
\n
- Distribution - The 73rd Amendment provides for three levels of panchayats at village, taluk, and district levels.
\n
- Unlike this, power in urban areas is concentrated in a single municipal body.
\n

- It could be the municipal corporation, municipal council or town panchayat.

\n

\n\n

What is the way forward?

\n\n

\n

- Local governments must be increasingly acknowledged as inherently political spaces.

\n

- The present model of urban governance vesting power in a singular municipality should be relooked.

\n

- Urban governance reforms should focus on political empowerment of local government that promotes local democratic accountability.
