

Issues with RERA

Why in news?

\n\n

Recently a new piece of legislation governing the real estate sector came into force.

\n\n

What is Real Estate Regulation and Development Act (RERA)?

\n\n

\n

- It was proposed in 2009 and got implemented in the year 2016.
- The aim of the Act is to safeguard the interest of home buyers in the primary real estate market.
- The Act stipulates compulsory registration of all the residential projects with plot size more than 500 sq. meters.
- The developer will need to disclose draft of builder buyer agreements, to the authority.
- A clear picture of the number of units sold and construction status also has to be disclosed.
- Incorrect or incomplete disclosure will attract a penalty of 5% of project cost.
- Buyer will be able to get information on defaulting developers.
- It has been decided that a developer can sell only on the basis of usable area.
- This helps a home buyer understand how much he is paying for each sq. ft that he will get for his use.

How this law will be implemented?

\n\n

\n

- RERA is a central law, its implementation requires the co-operation of state governments.
- The law requires each state and Union Territory to set up its own real estate regulatory authority.
- It will be this authority that should frame the rules under which the Act will operate in that state or Union Territory.
- All the projects and agents operating in the state are supposed to register with this state-level regulatory authority within three months of the notification of the Act.
- This provides important transparency to buyers.
- A web site need to be maintained by the state level regulator, so that buyer can check the details of the project's regulatory filings.

What are the issues with the implementation?

\n\n

\n

- Many state governments are lagging in the full and proper implantation of the Act.
- Out of 36 only 24 states and Union Territories had not set up regulatory authorities and 16 had failed to notify their rules.
- The real estate sector has been highly affected by demonetisation and GST tax regimes.
- Many projects and agents have to wait leading to a slow pace of registration.
- For instance, only three projects were reported as having been registered in Rajasthan.
- In Mumbai, although there may be as many as 800 real estate projects under way in the city proper, not one had sought registration.
- Some major disruption of business seems inevitable for the sector.
