

Menstruation Benefits Bill

What is the issue?

\n\n

\n

- Menstruation Benefits Bill was tabled as a private member bill in the Parliament earlier in the year.

\n

- It is imperative to look at the significance of the provisions, for a gender sensitive labour policy.

\n

\n\n

What is the bill on?

\n\n

\n

- It seeks to provide working women two days of paid menstrual leave every month.

\n

- It applies to women working in both public and private sectors.

\n

- The Bill also seeks to provide better facilities for rest at the workplace during menstruation.

\n

- It includes providing women the flexibility to take time off, and with options like working from home.

\n

- The benefits are also extended to female students of Class VIII and above in government recognised schools.

\n

\n\n

Is this a new idea?

\n\n

\n

- Paid menstrual leave has been in practice since long time back.

- \n
- Bihar has had special leave for women for two days since 1992.
- \n
- Although, it is not explicitly referred to as the menstruation leave.
- \n
- Women can decide which two days of the month they would like to take off.
- \n
- Also, they do not have to provide any justification for doing so.
- \n
- In the recent past, some private companies in India have started offering menstrual leave.
- \n
- Several countries such as Japan, South Korea, Indonesia, etc also have menstrual leave provisions.
- \n

\n\n

What are the concerns with it?

\n\n

- \n
- It would prejudice employers against hiring women and lead to their alienation at work.
- \n
- Most women are capable of functioning at full capacity even during their periods.
- \n
- So, for the handful of women who do suffer unbearable symptoms, the existing sick leave option is adequate.
- \n
- Menstrual leave policies might discriminate against men.
- \n
- This is because women would get additional days off every year.
- \n
- However, the counter arguments are largely a reflection of continuing age old gender biases.
- \n

\n\n

Why is menstrual leave significant?

\n\n

- \n
- Menstruation is a perfectly natural biological process, not a disease or a disability.

\n

- However, it can range from a slightly discomforting to a severely debilitating experience for women.

\n

- Nearly 20% of women suffer from uncomfortable symptoms.

\n

- These may include cramps, nausea, fever and weakness during their periods.

\n

- These are debilitating enough to hamper their daily activities.

\n

- Some women also experience reduced emotional control and decreased concentration.

\n

- Over 25 million women suffer from endometriosis.

\n

- This is a chronic condition in which period pain is so bad that women nearly pass out from it.

\n

\n\n

\n

- It is true that periods are weakening only for some women.

\n

- But the numbers are not insignificant to avoid a policy decision.

\n

\n\n

What is the way forward?

\n\n

\n

- The Bill takes gender equity discourse forward in a constructive and balanced manner.

\n

- Implementation - Policy formulation would be meaningful only if backed by enforcement measures.

\n

- Evidently, women are continued to be laid off for demanding maternity entitlements.

\n

- Participation - Menstrual leave policies must be introduced alongside measures to increase workforce participation of women.

\n

- Worryingly, the female workforce participation rate in the country has declined from 36% in 2005-06 to 24% in 2015-16.

\n

- Measures aimed at reversing this decline are crucial.

\n

- Workplace - Efforts at making workplaces more inclusive and gender sensitive is essential.

\n

- Separate toilets for men and women with facilities for disposal of sanitary napkins should be ensured.

\n

- The Parliament should take up the Bill on menstrual leave and hold a discussion on it soon.
