

National Commission for Minorities

Why in news?

\n\n

Delhi High Court last week sought the Centre's response on a plea against government "inaction" on making appointments to the National Commission for Minorities (NCM).

\n\n

What is the issue?

\n\n

\n

- The governments' apathy towards minorities is clearly visible by its inaction by not appointing any members to the national Commission for Minorities.

\n

- Earlier in March, Opposition members in Rajya Sabha protested against unfilled vacancies in the commissions for Scheduled Castes, Scheduled Tribes, Backward Classes and Minorities.

\n

- The NCM is supposed to have a Chairperson, a Vice-Chairperson, and 7 members, at least 5 of whom should be from minority communities.

\n

- The communities listed as minorities under the National Commission for Minorities Act, 1992, are Muslims, Christians, Sikhs, Parsis and Buddhists.

\n

- Jains were included in the list in 2014.

\n

\n\n

What does the commission deals with?

\n\n

\n

- It is a forum for appeal, set up to safeguard the rights and interests of India's minority communities.

\n

- Unlike the National Commission for SCs and for STs, National Commission

for Minorities is a statutory body.

\n

- The NCM Act lists 9 functions of the Commission:

\n

- to evaluate the progress of the development of minorities under the Union and states;

\n

- to monitor the working of safeguards provided in the Constitution and in union and state laws;

\n

- to make recommendations for effective implementation of safeguards for the protection of minority interests;

\n

- to look into, and take up, specific complaints regarding deprivation of rights and safeguards of minorities;

\n

- to get problems of discrimination against minorities studied, and recommend ways to remove them;

\n

- to conduct studies, research, analysis on socioeconomic and educational development of minorities;

\n

- to suggest appropriate measures in respect of any minority to be undertaken by central or state governments;

\n

- to make periodic or special reports to the Centre on any matter concerning minorities; especially their difficulties;

\n

- To take up any other matter that may be referred to it by the central government.

\n

\n\n

What is the difference between a constitutional and statutory body?

\n\n

\n

- The power and authority vested in a constitutional body are very different from those vested in a statutory body.

\n

- Constitutional bodies have greater autonomy; they can take up and inquire into many matters suo motu, and have powers of a civil court.

\n

- Again, not all statutory bodies are the same — the National Human Rights Commission (NHRC) has more powers than the NCM.

\n

\n\n

Why is there a need for such commission?

\n\n

\n

- The Constitution is unambiguous about the rights of individuals, and of certain groups and minorities.

\n

- The success of a pluralistic democracy lies in these rational and robust institutions which protect those rights, or give those abstract ideas shape on the ground.

\n

- The degree of autonomy with which organisations like the NCM, NCSC, NCST or NCBC are able to function eventually decides how healthy a democracy is.

\n

- These are systems that allow for a healthy evaluation of the state of the nation, a forum for airing of discontent, which ultimately strengthens the system, apart from allowing individuals to fully exercise their rights.

\n

\n\n

What happened to the move to give the NCM constitutional status?

\n\n

\n

- The Constitution (One Hundred and Third Amendment) Bill, 2004, proposed to establish a new Commission, with constitutional status.

\n

- But it got trapped in the quagmire of who is a 'minority', and the Bill lapsed.

\n

- The founding fathers of the Constitution, as well as the framers of the 1992 Act seemed to have a clear idea of who 'minorities' were.

\n

- But the Supreme Court, in a matter concerning minority educational institutions, ruled in October 2002 that a state may be considered as the basic unit for the protection of the right of minorities to set up minority educational institutions .

\n

- Subsequently, a May 2007 cabinet proposal defined minorities along these lines — so Hindus were a minority in states such as Jammu & Kashmir, Punjab, Arunachal Pradesh, Nagaland, Meghalaya and Mizoram.

\n

- This presented complications, as religious and linguistic minorities had been historically defined in terms of their overall numbers in the country.
- While the NCM's recommendations are often ignored, the Centre is required to present its reports, along with an action taken report, to Parliament.
- In cases involving states, the NCM is obliged to advise or act in some way.

\n

\n\n

\n\n

Source: Indian Express

\n

