

Post Doklam Scenario

What is the issue?

 $n\n$

Now that the Doklam stand-off and the BRICS summit are over, it's time that India pay attention to some developing bilateral scenarios.

 $n\n$

What all should India focus on?

 $n\n$

\n

• Bhutan - Though not being as strategic as for India, the unrest in Doklam was of a concern for Bhutan.

\n

- Also, views within Bhutan are strongly demanding a "balanced foreign policy" i.e. opening of ties with China as well.
- \bullet China could exploit the situation, to influence Bhutan and gain it support.
- Thus, India should consider working on the hydropower potential of Bhutan, assisting it in its economic development, etc more firmly than before to retain the Bhutanese trust.

\n

- China Beijing has maintained that Doklam had been part of China since ancient times, and continues to claim its sovereignty.
- Notably, the intention for a smooth BRICS summit is also behind China's stance on ending the Dokalm stand-off.
- \bullet Also, China will not let down Pakistan while the CPEC is gaining momentum as one of the major components of the Belt and Road Initiative. \n
- India should beware and focus on its military preparedness to encounter a possible two-front collusive threat from China and Pakistan.
- US, Russia India is, in recent years, getting closer to the US.

• Though being strategic, this has its own problems as this is likely to distance India from China and even Russia.

\n

\n

\n

- Even groupings like the BRICS are getting to be 'limited purpose partnership' to achieve specific sets of outcomes rather than a common ideological convergence.
- India should take note of this, given Russia's intention to use BRICS as an organisation against the West, particularly the US and encourage the Chinese leadership.
- Japan In the present scenario, partnership with Japan, besides the US, could be the cornerstone of a coalition to take on China's economic and military might.
- \bullet As this could help in other larger coalitions that may include countries willing to resist Chinese dominance in the Asia-Pacific region. \n

 $n\n$

What is the way forward?

 $n\n$

۱n

- \bullet Bilateral relations are taking shape beyond bilateral relevance and starting to be determinants of international relations and internal security. \n
- \bullet India should pay heed to these developments and strategise on its foreign diplomacy. $\ensuremath{\backslash n}$

\n\n

\n\n

Source: Indian Express

\n

