Water Stress

- A new data about ‘water stress’ was released by the World Resources Institute (WRI).
- One-quarter of the world’s population faces “extremely high” levels of baseline water stress.
- India is 13th among 17 countries which faces huge water stress.

- India has more than three times the population of the other 16 extremely highly stressed countries.
- It implies that more than three-quarters of these populations facing extremely high water stress live in India.
- The report noted that last year, NITI Aayog declared that the country is “suffering from the worst water crisis in its history.
- India’s groundwater resources are severely overdrawn, largely to provide water for irrigation.
- Groundwater tables in some northern aquifers declined at a rate of more than 8 cm per year between 1990 and 2014.

- Steps taken by India to mitigate water stress including,
 - Setting up the Jal Shakti Ministry.
 - Other solutions which the WRI suggested, includes more efficient irrigation,
 - conserving and restoring lakes, floodplains,
 - groundwater recharge areas; and
 - collecting and storing rainwater.
- Globally, water withdrawals have more than doubled since the 1960s due to growing demand.

- 17 countries face withdrawals of 80% or more from available supply, 12 of them are in the Middle East and North Africa.
- Another 44 countries (home to one-third of the world) face “high” levels of stress, where on average more than 40% of available supply is withdrawn every year.
- The World Bank found that this region has the greatest expected economic losses from climate-related water scarcity,
- The economic losses is estimated at 6%-14% of GDP by 2050.
- Even in countries with low overall water stress, communities may still be experiencing extremely stressed conditions.
- For example, South Africa and the United States, which rank 48 and 71 on the list, respectively, yet the Western Cape (SA) and New Mexico (US) experience extremely high stress levels.
