Siang River

\n\n

\n

- The Siang River flows for about 1,600 kilometres as Tsangpo River through the Tibet plateau, before entering India in Arunachal Pradesh.

\n

- The river becomes Brahmaputra after it flows into Assam near Sadiya.

\n

- In recent days, Siang which flows through Arunachal Pradesh has unusually turned muddy and darkened.

\n

- This has firmed up the suspicion that China may have begun construction of the world's longest tunnel upstream.

\n

- The 1000 km long tunnel will divert water from the Brahmaputra River in Tibet close to Arunachal Pradesh to the parched Xinjiang region.
