Why in News?

The 80th anniversary of the 1946 Royal Indian Navy Mutiny commemorates a major anti-colonial uprising, one of the last significant revolts against British rule before India's independence.

- RIN Mutiny - Revolt by Indian sailors of the Royal Indian Navy on February 18, 1946, against British rule, primarily in Mumbai (then Bombay), Maharashtra.
- Historical Background - Called the last war of independence, representing a struggle against British imperial forces.
- Sailors (ratings) of the Royal Indian Navy (RIN) revolted due to poor treatment, lack of compensation, and racial discrimination.
- Causes - Ratings were deployed in World Wars and other British campaigns without special compensation.
- Recruitment issues - False promises of secure jobs, promotion, and a better life.
- Poor conditions in naval bases - Inadequate training, overcrowded establishments, shortage of staff, ill-treatment, low-quality food, restricted cultural expression, and limited medical facilities.
- Racial discrimination - Appointment of Arthur Frederick King, a racist officer, as Commander of HMIS Talwar.
- Prior Agitations - Previous small-scale agitations between 1942 and 1945 in Bombay and Odisha.
- Nationalist Influences - Influence of the Quit India Movement and the Indian National Army inspired action.
- Leadership and Organisation - Planning committee headquarters - Established at Marine Drive, Mumbai, led by Pran and Kusum Nair
- Support for the mutiny came from,
 - Members of the Ex-Services Association and the Indian People's Theatre Association.
 - Y. K. Menon and Aruna Asaf Ali
- Key leaders - Salil Shyam, B. C. Dutt, Madan Singh, Rishi Dev Puri, and M. S. Khan
- The Central Strike Committee was formed to coordinate actions across naval bases.
- Renaming - The Royal Indian Navy was symbolically renamed the Indian National Navy, and the Royal Gate was renamed Azad Gate.
- Course of the Mutiny - Feb 1, 1946 - HMIS Talwar, Mumbai, became the centre of resistance, and

- R. K. Singh resigned symbolically, and B. C. Dutt was arrested for anti-British activities sparked widespread defiance.
- Feb 18, 1946 - Around 1,100 Royal Indian Navy ratings of HMIS Talwar went on strike under the slogan “No Food, No Work” and with other demands, namely,
 - End racial discrimination
 - Equal pay for Indian and white soldiers.
 - Improve food quality.
 - Stop abuse by superior officers.
 - Release the rating arrested for scrawling “Quit India” on HMIS Talwar.
 - Release those facing trials in the Indian National Army (INA) cases.
 - Withdraw Indian troops deployed in Indonesia.
- Open revolt included raising Congress Party flags, shouting nationalist slogans (“Quit India”, “Jai Hind”), distributing pamphlets, and symbolically taking over the base.
- Spread - Ratings contacted other naval bases across India, spreading the mutiny to Vishakhapatnam, Cochin, Kolkata, and Karachi, indicating widespread unrest nationwide.
- IAF Support - Personnel from the Royal Indian Air Force showed solidarity by organising strikes and refusing certain duties, though they did not engage in armed rebellion.
- Public and Media Support - The Indian press reported the uprising, and All India Radio broadcast the news.
- Civilians joined in protest, supporting the ratings, closing shops, and challenging British authority.
- Demands of Ratings -
 - Release of R. K. Singh and other imprisoned leaders.
 - Action against Arthur Frederick King.
 - Better food, gratuity, and funds upon demobilisation.
 - Release of INA prisoners and inquiry into public firing incidents.
- Outcome - Suppression - The British attempted to quell the revolt using arrests and military force.
- Leaders like Madan Singh and M. A. Khan faced harsh treatment after the Talwar uprising was subdued.
 - But the revolt continued in other ports like Karachi.
- Result - The revolt was called off after intervention by senior Indian political leaders, including Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel.
- The RIN revolt was seen as an event marking the end of British rule.
