Smartphone Ban in Rajasthan

The caste panchayat in Jalore, Rajasthan, banned women from accessing smartphones, specifically camera phones.

- Stated Rationale - Women raised concerns about children's excessive screen time, while elders argued that women do not require smartphones for professional purposes.
- Underlying Societal Issues - The ban reflects attempts to control women's autonomy, concerns about maintaining perceived moral standards, and fears that social media may facilitate inter-community relationships and disrupt traditional marriage arrangements, such as the satta-watta system.
- Retraction of the Ban - The ban was rescinded following widespread public outrage, significant backlash on social media, and intervention by the National Human Rights Commission (NHRC).
- NHRC Response - The NHRC took cognisance of the incident and issued a notice to the District Magistrate of Jalore, requesting a detailed report.
- Gender-Based Digital Divide - In rural India, there is a pronounced gender gap in mobile phone ownership, with 80.7% of men owning mobile phones compared to only 48.45% of women.
- Impact on Education - Girls frequently discontinue their education due to responsibilities such as household chores and agricultural work, as well as concerns about being perceived as 'too educated' relative to men.
- Contrasting Approaches - In contrast, digital detox initiatives in other villages, such as Halaga and Mohityanche Vadgaon, address screen time concerns for all community members rather than targeting specific groups.
